IRISH NEWS

O'Halloran and Higginson leaving HSA

Martin O'Halloran, Chief Executive Officer, Health and Safety Authority (HSA) and Brian Higginson, Assistant Chief Executive for Operational Compliance and Prevention, HSA, have both recently announced that they will be leaving the HSA in 2018. O'Halloran is leaving due to retirement and Higginson is moving onto a new role with the Commission for Railway Regulation. National Irish Safety Organisation would like to acknowledge both Martin O'Halloran's and Brian Higginson's contribution to health and safety in Ireland and to wish them well in their future endeavours.

Statement of the HSA regarding first aid training

The Health and Safety Authority (HSA) has determined, in consultation with Quality and Qualifications Ireland (QQI) and Pre Hospital Emergency Care Council (PHECC), that dual recognition of QQI 5N1207 and PHECC FAR will continue until 31st May 2018. Thereafter the HSA will only recognise PHECC FAR.

Driving fatigue

Where driving is part of work roles, most organisations have adopted fatigue management policies. But as vehicles include more automation and less driver input, will we also turn to driver monitoring technologies? In the UK, driver fatigue is implicated in one in five road accidents and one in four fatalities.

Using virtual reality to simulate real risks

The advent of convincing and accessible virtual reality (VR) and augmented reality (AR) platforms allows for health and safety training to take place that is more practical, realistic and engaging than some existing training solutions. The ability to replicate real locations and introduce convincing, danger-free hazards could herald a revolution in health and safety training, reducing deaths and injuries in high-risk professions.
